INTRODUCTION

For gas grid operators, the development of European Standards provides a common sound basis for constructing and operating safe and reliable gas infrastructure in a very cost effective way. Collaboration in standardisation activities offers exchange of experience and knowledge among high level European experts and facilitates the use of the future standards in daily practice by gas companies. The early development of standards regarding new technologies is also a key factor to help their introduction on the market. But there are many other reasons to be a part of the standardisation community! EFG 2012 aims to provide you with the rationale – in your function as a company manager or as a gas expert - of your involvement in standardisation, and also gives you a unique platform where answers to your questions can be given.
